400 Decatur Street stands on the westerly side of the street at the intersection of Davidson Street, northwest corner, about five blocks north of Baltimore Avenue (U.S. Route 40) in Cumberland, Allegany County, Maryland.

The house is a mid nineteenth century brick structure with three stories, a stone foundation, and a three bay symmetrical facade (east side). The north and south end walls extend above the roof forming parapets. The south end wall has double internal chimneys. A two and a half story brick wing is attached to the back (west side) with a side porch and balcony along Davidson Street. The line of the low pitch roof, which is covered with metal stripes, runs north/south.

The facade has a recessed entrance in the north bay of the first floor, two windows in the foundation, and a brick belt course just below the third story windows. The windows of the first and second story have double-hung wooden sashes with six-over-six lights. The third story windows are single wooden sashes with three lights each as are the basement windows. The entranceway has a wide board surround with a shouldered architrave with cornice. The doorway is recessed about five feet and has rectangular transom and sidelights. The door is wood frame with one large light, circa 1910. The entranceway is reached by a set of three sandstone steps and on to the doorway by wooden steps.
